"Give me what I need, help me," she begged.

"No, you give me what I need, you help me," he replied.

"You don’t grieve at all," she said.

"All you ever do is cry," he said.

Such is the journey with moms and dads as they struggle to find the way after the death of a child. "He" and "She" can be interchanged in all those statements, because there is no gender exclusivity to how we grieve. A father may go inward and the mother may cry. Or, a father may wear his grief on the outside and a mother may keep her pain hidden. Whichever way we endure our pain is how it works best for us. But it can be hurtful when it becomes a competition as to who misses or loves the child the most and who is grieving correctly. Add guilt or blame, and emotions are taken to a new and sometimes damaging level.

The dramatic differences in grieving styles of moms and dads (or women and men in general) are not unusual. We are not alone in how we feel.

Since our husband or wife has been our closest supporter and best friend over the years, we expect that support to continue after a child dies. We shared everything when they were alive and we expect that to happen now that they died. We laughed with each other and now want to cry with each other, too. But, what we often find is that the person we expect to be able to lean on the most isn’t there, and we fall. That confuses, hurts, and angers us. We think, “You’ve known what I needed in the past, why can’t you see what I need now?” Either parent could say that. The mom and dad of a child who has died have much in common, but also much they can’t give each other. What we know is common suffering, our pain is equally intense, and we both feel the loss deeply. But since we are both in such turmoil and barely able to take care of ourselves, it can be impossible to give each other a safe place to grieve, a harbor for our broken heart where our way of grieving will be understood and respected. Our expectations of each other are high, often times too high.

When our child was alive, we lived in "our" world. Both happy and sad times were "our" times. Decisions were made jointly; they were "our" decisions as to what was best for our child. For the most part, we were able to share our points of view and find a compromise that worked in the "our" world. We gave respect to each other’s way of parenting and then our kids died and we fell apart. When they were alive, we had access to hundreds of books on parenting, plus we had ingrained in us the methods that were used to parent us. We drew information and strength from them. But no one taught us how to cope with the death of our children. There is no book available, so we turned to each other for that knowledge. What we found was that the “our” world had suddenly turned to an “I” world, because it had to for our survival. The realization that our closest partner couldn’t help us and that we couldn’t help them, was confusing. We asked, “So, if you can’t help me, what am I supposed to do with my suffering?”

The key to coming back to each other is taking and sharing... communicating. It is paramount to share our pain with our partner and not judge or criticize his way of grieving. Some of us read books on grief and attend support groups. Others find writing, painting or gardening to be a good way to release the pain. There are also non-verbal ways of sharing our suffering. A hug, a back rub, flowers given with sympathy and empathy can go a long way to healing wounds that have been opened by our grief.

Don’t make grieving a competition, make it a collaboration. Our patience will be tested as we see our partner progress at a different rate than us.
You can now connect with the KIDS Network via Facebook groups! These closed groups are a place for bereaved families in Kansas to offer and receive peer support, ask questions, and connect. Each region has its own group so families can connect with people in their area.

To join the group in your area, send a friend request to Christy Schunn Kids and ask to join the Facebook group.

Safe Sleep Instructor Training

November 3 & 4, 2016

The Kansas Infant Death and SIDS Network (KIDS Network) invites applications for the 2016 Safe Sleep Instructor training. Training will be conducted in collaboration with a team from the University of Kansas School of Medicine-Wichita. The Safe Sleep Instructor training is supported by a Title V grant from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment Safe Sleep Expansion Project.

Kansas Safe Sleep Instructors will provide Safe Sleep trainings to health professionals in a variety of settings, including hospitals, doctors’ offices, public health, nonprofit organizations, private businesses, schools and colleges within their region.

The goal of the Safe Sleep Instructor Training is to train regional trainers to educate Kansas parents/caregivers, child care providers, health care providers, and other community members about safe infant sleep practices. Safe Sleep Instructors will be the voice of Safe Sleep by promoting Safe Sleep through standardized training and community outreach. Each Safe Sleep Instructor will be tasked with the goal of completing Safe Sleep training with at least 10 professionals to educate their local communities about safe infant sleep practices by March 31, 2017.

Training Details:

Safe Sleep Instructors will be required to participate in a two-day training conducted by the KIDS Network and KU School of Medicine-Wichita, (hotel, mileage and meals included). The training will include the following components:

- Background on SIDS and other sleep-related causes of infant death
- History of the Safe Sleep campaign
- Community outreach training
- How to facilitate a Safe Sleep Community Baby Shower

All Safe Sleep Instructors will be expected to:

- Become familiar with the updated American Academy of Pediatrics Safe Sleep recommendations.
- Educate parents/caregivers, child care providers, health care providers, and other community members about safe infant sleep practices.
- Work with local media and/or conduct community outreach to highlight the public health issue of SIDS and other sleep-related causes of infant death with a focus on Safe Sleep.
- Serve as a liaison to the KIDS Network for ongoing communication, tracking, and evaluation.
- Attend annual Safe Sleep refresher courses in person or via webinar.

Training Dates:

The two-day training will be held Thursday and Friday, November 3rd & 4th at the University of Kansas School of Medicine in Wichita, KS. Each Safe Sleep Instructor will be required to participate in the training.

Exploring the Experience of Life Stress Among Black Women with a History of Fetal or Infant Death

Disparate birth outcomes among Black women continue to be a major public health problem. Whereas prior research has investigated the influence of stress on Black women’s birth outcomes, few studies have explored how stress is experienced among Black women across the life course. The objectives of this study were to describe the experience of stress across the life course among Black women who reported a history of fetal or infant death and to identify stressful life events (SLE) that may be represented in the widely used SLE inventory.

Collaborating with Obstetrical providers to Promote Infant Safe Sleep Guidelines

The objective of this project was to partner with obstetrical providers to increase promotion of the American Academy of Pediatrics guidelines for infant safe sleep. Specifically, the study evaluates the effectiveness of the Safe Sleep Toolkit during obstetrical visits. Secondary objectives include improving provider and maternal knowledge of safe sleep.
